

Humanity's Candle Hiatus

Hello readers,

For much of the year I have been on hiatus from this blog. First, I wanted to prepare for a conference sponsored by the DVC academic senate in late August that took a couple of weeks to prepare for. Additionally, I took a computer science class, which I completed and received an A. As a result, that class took up most, if not all of my time. The remainder of my time was devoted to a history class, which I was on track to fail at one point. But, with better time management and planning I earned an A in that class as well. Finally, for the first two weeks of my winter break I was not motivated. Thank you for your interest and understanding. Kevin Crane
